

the Night pours damp ink onto the ground,
Grass repose their whispers toward the air.
Lambently, Moonlight knocks on my window,
bringing old secrets from afar.

She lent me a flying-machine
woven from the blooming Narcissus.
I shuttle, and shuttle
in the ripples of thy deep night.